Everybody Always

Our world today moves a lot faster than it used to. What are some differences you have noticed from even just a few years ago?

How do you think the “speed” of our world affects our level of patience?

Can you describe a time in your life when haste led you to jump to a wrong conclusion or to make a decision you came to regret?

In what areas of your life do you have a hard time choosing patience instead of trying to “do it yourself”?

What are some ways we might take care to be more patient with one another?

How can we demonstrate more patience in our daily lives? What might this look like?
